THIS WIDOW'S MITE IS HER FAMILY OF
"FIGHTING NOLANS"

There Are Seven of Them and All Are Offered to Their Country.

As Uncle Sam is going up and down his country to-day collecting names and addresses for his big war book, there is a name and an address in Brooklyn about which he might put a big red mark and inscribe after it, "See the Nolans."

If he should go visiting there, as an Evening World reporter went this afternoon, he would find, first, the Widow Nolan, a kindly, sturdy woman of sixty, and about her a brood of eleven hale and hearty children, and every last one of them ready to go to the front with her blessing. Then he would find a rugged patriotism that's been alive since the Widow Nolan's father, James Hall, went to the Civil War with Col. Cochran of the "Fighting Sixty-ninth."

The reason for the reporter's visit was the offer of their services that two of the Widow Nolan's daughters made to-day to the chief naval recruiting station in Brooklyn.

"We'll do anything," they had telephoned to Chief Quartermaster Martinson, "we'll go into aviation; we'll go to the front, we'll take any job Uncle Sam has to offer us," was the telephone message from the girls.

When the reporter went to the Nolan home at No. 2123 Pacific Street, Mrs. Hanna Nolan, the widow, came to the door with a sixteen-month-old grandson—Stanley Monroe—on her arm.

"To be sure my daughters offered their services," she said, "and I only wish this youngster—she joked the baby up and down in her arms—was old enough to enlist. He'd go too. We're all of us ready to serve in any way we can. I don't know what I could do, but I sort of think I've done my duty. I've brought sixteen children into the world, and eleven of them are living now, four boys and seven girls."

"Three of my boys are already in the service. William, he's twenty-seven, is in Company K of the Sixty-ninth, and so is his brother, George, thirty-three. George, who's twenty-four, is in Company A of the Fourteenth Regiment. So, of course, my girls want to help too. I only wish I had more children more children to offer."

Miss Irene, who is only eighteen and a typist, said she would just as soon become a nurse, "or anything that would help our country. I don't want to be idle while the war is going on. There must be something I can do and that's why I offered myself."

"You're the regular Fighting Nolan," the reporter ventured.

"Call us that and welcome," replied the Widow Nolan with a smile.

GIRL KIDNAPPED IN TAXI.

Two Arrested After Chase for Alleged Part in Abduction.

Two men alleged to have helped in kidnap a girl and have her carried off in a taxicab were arrested this morning near First Avenue and Sixty-third Street. The police have sent out an alarm for the cab, which bears the number 4619 New York. One of the prisoners, Santo Grogio, twenty-two years old, of No. 322 East Sixty-third Street, is said to be the owner of the taxi. Joseph Sardelli, of No. 480 East Sixty-third Street, is charged with being Grogio's driver. The girl's name is unknown.

Two men ran up to Policeman John Welch in First Avenue at 7:30 A. M. and pointed out the alleged kidnapers. They said they saw them seize a girl, slap their hands over her mouth and throw her into a taxicab. A man inside pushed her into a seat and the taxi ran north. The men pointed out to Welch and he gave chase, threatening to shoot. Both finally surrendered. They refused to talk. They will be taken to Yorkville court.
